Moody's takes action on 13 Spanish RMBS transactions

Madrid, July 23, 2008 -- In a new Rating Methodology report, published 22 July 2008, Moody's Investors Service explains recent updates to its modelling approach to rating Spanish residential mortgage-backed securities (RMBS). The amendments outlined in the new report relate to updates of certain parameters within the Spanish MILAN model implemented by Moody's during 2007 and 2008 to date. In particular, Moody's has updated its analysis of Spanish borrowers' stressed default frequency and Spanish house price stress rates. Moody's has also refined the adjustments it makes in relation to loan products, borrower characteristics and origination channels.

Overall, the refinements to Moody's MILAN tool for Spain result in higher credit enhancement levels for Spanish RMBS pools, especially those with riskier features, such as higher loan-to-value ratios and higher-risk products. Within the universe of transactions rated by Moody's that are backed by pools with such riskier features, Moody's has flagged 13 deals, most of which are currently performing outside of our initial expectations. For these deals we expect the methodology update to typically have a one notch impact, although some tranches may be affected by up to two notches, on the current ratings, in addition to any further rating impact that may be driven by the performance review. Moody's will in the coming days put under review for downgrade all affected tranches. Moody's does not expect that at this stage any other ratings to be affected only as a result of these updates.

Moody's has today put under review for downgrade the following tranches:
